Chicago, Illinois
Cook County

Roseland Ridge is a newly constructed (completed fall 2000) 40-unit affordable rental housing and garden development for Neighborhood Housing Services. The long and narrow site (2.1-acres) was addressed by creating a grouping of four buildings. Laid out to form an open-sided garden courtyard, the site plan provides a development that is at once modern, safe and secure. Most kitchens and family rooms feature windows looking out on to the interior garden, so that parents can maintain visual contact with children playing outside. The project has won a Driehaus Foundation Award for Architectural Excellence in Community Design, 2001, and a Distinguished Building Award from the Chicago Chapter of the American Institute of Architects, 2001.
